

Day 1, 6 p.m.
First signs of unknown contagion on Bradley campus. Isolated incidents of rabid attack, cannibalism among students. Humans begin to organize a resistance.

Day 3, 1 p.m.
The humans successfully enlist the help of master swordsmith Hattori Hanzo. Hanzo-San begins crafting the humans melee weapons to take the fight back to the undead horde.

Day 4, 12 p.m.
A fire alarm at a nearby meat packing plant malfunctions, attracting the undead and allowing some to feed, preventing the starvation of several zombies.

Day 4, 5 p.m.
Zombies roving the area in search of flesh to devour stumble upon the products of ill-fated research that increases their resistance to human weapons.

Day 4, 8 p.m.
Order is abruptly restored by the unexpected return of the military following the arrest of zombie Nick Weiss for disorderly conduct.

Day 2, 10 a.m.
Zombies have already claimed many resistance lives and their numbers are growing swiftly. Humans search in desperation for a leader.

Day 2, 8 p.m.
While attempting to create a safe zone and get coordinated, a desperately outnumbered human strike force is utterly routed in the battle for Center Court. There are few survivors.

Day 3, 10 p.m.
A scientist working in Olin Hall successfully creates a temporary vaccine but is beset by his former test subjects. The humans stage a daring rescue and, armed with their new weapons, earn themselves a reprieve from the shambling hordes.

Day 4, 6 p.m.
Humans receive news of a potentially operable homing beacon that would enable them to call for rescue. Planning for a mission to recover and repair the beacon begins immediately.

Day 5, Dawn
Against all odds, the humans have survived the plague. But the victory is a hollow one, as so much has been lost by both sides. Dead are buried, losses mourned, and things slowly slip back into routine... for now.